FAQS

QUESTION	ANSWER
Why did the pail color change?	We've updated our packaging to comply with new state regulations in California and New Jersey, which require plastic pails to include a percentage of post-consumer recycled (PCR) content. Recycled plastic comes from various sources and can have slight color variations. Adding a black pigment helps to create a uniform, consistent color.
What's the new pail made from?	The new black pails contain 30% post-consumer recycled plastic, supporting our commitment to sustainability.
Has the product formula changed?	No. The formula, performance, and quality you trust remain exactly the same.
Will I still see white pails?	Yes—for now. We are working through our existing white pail inventory, so you may receive either white or black pails during this transition period.
Why did the handle change to plastic?	The curb-ready plastic design lets the entire pail be recycled without removing the handle. It's lower weight also reduces transportation emissions—while still delivering the strength customers expect.
Is this a permanent change?	Yes. All Design Polymerics pails will eventually transition to black PCR-compliant packaging.
